

Our House is on Fire: A group exhibition featuring Judy Brodsky, Linda Dubin Garfield, Pamela Tudor, and Elsa Wachs

HAMMONTON, N.J. – The Noyes Galleries at Stockton University’s Kramer Hall presents Our House is on Fire, an exhibition created by four artists who are concerned about the ecological future of our country and planet. Through their works, Judy Brodsky (Princeton, NJ), Linda Dubin Garfield (Bala Cynwyd, PA), Pamela Tudor (Philadelphia, PA), and Elsa Wachs (Wynnewood, PA) inspire both discussion and concern about preserving the health and safety of the planet we call home.

About the exhibition, these artists write, “Artists are often inspired by nature and create art out of the outstanding natural beauty all around us. We are now at a critical juncture where we need to advocate for harnessing our imagination, wealth, and technology to make our communities and our country greener and healthier places to live for everyone. Recently the Supreme Court curtailed the powers of the EPA to protect the environment, no longer requiring the reductions in emissions that are urgently needed to limit global warming. What are we to do? We need clean air, clean water, clean energy, open spaces and a livable climate for ourselves and future generations. Artists are interpreting these catastrophic times using our visual language. Through our art, we strive to create an appreciation for natural beauty and a concern for its preservation.”

An opening reception for Our House is on Fire will be held at the Noyes Galleries at Stockton University’s Kramer Hall on February 15th, 2024 between 5:00 – 7:00 PM. The exhibition is free and open to the public from February 14th – May 17th, 2024, and the hours of the Noyes Galleries are 8:30 am – 5:00 pm, Monday through Friday.
